spots on the market and the floor gossip circulated to the effect that the Goulds were getting out of the property, or at least greatly reducing their holdings.

A feature of the market is the great mass of stop-loss orders on the floor. All the "$2" brokers had both hands full of these orders. This was construed as evidence of a disposition on the part of the bulls to hedge against further reaction in prices As one broker put it:

"The bulls who have profits in their trades are willing to bet part of their winnings that the market will not have a serious brock, but they do not intend to let all their velvet disappear."

The industrial list was quiet and in the main held better than the railroad shares.

Call money was abundant, and forrowers had no trouble in getting all they wanted to-day at 2:1-2 per cent.
